The Food Film Festival™ returns to Charleston for the 3rd time, this November 11th-13th at The Cedar Room, with a mind-blowing line-up of screenings that range from the stunning to the scrumptious. In its ninth year, the Food Film Festival, created, directed, and hosted by George Motz, Travel Channel personality and food filmmaker, is an unexpectedly delightful three-days of viewing and tasting. The Food Film Festival is the only film festival of its kind, where guests get to taste what they see on the screen as they watch.

The three-day festival kicks off with an exclusive SOLD OUT opening night screening of the World Premiere of Anthony Bourdain: Parts Unknown - Charleston, presented by CNN, and will feature Sean Brock's personal Waffle House tasting menu. The festival will showcase a wide-array of films from around the globe as well as local selections including Cuda, a film about Summerville, S.C.'s iconic delicacy, The Cuda Dog, and Perry Cuda's restaurant, Perfectly Franks, in town. Also on the bill is Cultured Craft Beer, a film about Charleston's buzzing brewery scene, complete with tastes from each and every brewer featured. The infamous Food Porn Party will be returning with sultry, sumptuous films, food, and libations, such as Gin & Tonic, Balls, and Choco Thriller.

We've all salivated over the impossibly perfect dishes on cooking shows, unable to bring the same meal to fruition in our own kitchens. At the Food Film Festival, finally, you can taste exactly what you see on screen. It's a festival for the senses.
